Reflexive verbs

- A reflexive verb is one that has " SE" in front of the infinitive: se réveiller, s'habiller, se fâcher. This "SE" is called a REFLEXIVE PRONOUN, and just as the ending of the infinitive will change to agree with the person doing the action of verb, so will the reflexive pronoun change and agree:
  - me, te, se, nous, vous, se
  - se coucher je ME couche nous NOUS couchons
    se fâcher elle SE fâche tu TE fâches
- ALL REFLEXIVE VERBS take être as their auxiliary in the perfect tense, along with the other 16 non-reflexive verbs mentioned in F Lent 1. For a discussion about the agreement of past participles* of reflexive verbs see F Lent 7.
  - Elle s'est réveillée Elles se sont vues
    *Nous nous sommes écrit *Ils se sont parlé
- What does the reflexive pronoun mean or do? For some verbs it "reflects" the action of the verb back onto the person, in other words it means that they do it to themselves (je me lève – I get MYSELF up). In other cases, it is "reciprocal" and it means that several people perform the verb "to each other" (nous nous écrivons – we write to each other). And in some cases there is no English equivalent (comment ça s'écrit – how does it write itself = is it spelled).
- A common mistake is to forget to change the reflexive pronoun to the one that is needed. This happens in particular when an infinitive is used. (~~Nous devons SE coucher~~ instead of nous devons NOUS coucher.)
- The reflexive pronoun always goes before the conjugated verb (or infinitive):
  - je ne me rase pas le dimanche
    Pourquoi ne vous amusez-vous pas?
- In the imperative, the reflexive pronouns ME and TE become MOI and TOI in the positive imperative, and get attached to the verb with hyphens. Things behave perfectly normally in the negative imperative, however. See Lent Chapter 7.
  - réveille-toi! Ne te lève pas! Assieds-toi!

"Some", "any", "no" ...

- A French noun will nearly always have to have some sort of word in front of it :(Tu aimes le lait? Il y a des filles) This is not always the case in English. (Do you like _ milk? There are _ girls there).

- If, in English you use the word "some", then French will use one of the PARTITIVE ARTICLES "du, de la, de l', des). Likewise, if in English you use the word "the", French will use one of the DEFINITE ARTICLES "le, la, l', les".
  - Some cheese, some beer, some water, some boys,
  - du fromage, de la bière, de l'eau, des garçons

- The same applies whenever English has a specific word in front of the noun, you just use the French equivalent:
  - my cheese, this beer, their water, five boys
  - mon fromage, cette bière, leur eau, cinq garçons.

- The problem is in the cases mentioned at the top of the page, where English puts in no word at all. "I'm allergic to _ prawns" " What's on my sandwich? _ Ham."
  In these cases you will either use the PARTITIVE ARTICLE or the DEFINITE ARTICLE. To decide ask yourself if you are talking about:

  - an actual, tangible quantity of the noun: USE PARTITIVE
  - the noun in general: USE DEFINITE.

You've got _ chocolate on your shirt :	du chocolat
Did you bring _ chocolates?:	des chocolats
I can't bear _ chocolate:	le chocolat
There's _ chocolate all over the window:	du chocolat
_Chocolate is very bad for your teeth:	le chocolat

- After any negative particle (pas, jamais etc), the PARTITIVE ARTICLE becomes just DE.
  - Je ne mange plus de chocolat. Il ne fume jamais de cigares.
  - J'ai fait DE LA planche à voile, mais je n'ai pas fait DE ski.

- DE rather than the other PARTITIVE ARTICLES is used after all the quantity expressions such as "beaucoup de" "un peu de" trois kilos de" etc. It is possible to say "beaucoup DES" or "trop DU" but this means the word "THE" is needed.

beaucoup de chocolat (lots of)	beaucoup DU chocolat (lots of THE)
trop de bière (too much)	trop DE LA bière (too much of THE)
