EW 14 DEVOIR

85. DEVOIR

A. Meaning `to owe'

I owe him a pound : Je lui dois une livre

B To denote COMPULSION or OBLIGATION

The cardinal rule is that devoir (dû) is always followed by a present infinitive

If you are translating one of the following English meanings the tense of devoir in French will always be the one that is shown:

I am (due) to / I must / I have to	Je dois	PRESENT TENSE
I will have to	Je devrai	FUTURE TENSE
I was (due) to	Je devais	IMPERFECT TENSE
I had to / must (= I used to have to)	Je devais	IMPERFECT TENSE
I ought to / I should / would have to	Je devrais	CONDITIONAL TENSE
I had to (= completed event)	J'ai dû / Je dus	PERFECT / PAST HISTORIC
I had had to	J'avais dû	PLUPERFECT TENSE
I would have had to	J'aurais dû	CONDITIONAL PERFECT
I ought to have . . .	J'aurais dû	CONDITIONAL PERFECT
I should have . . .	J'aurais dû	CONDITIONAL PERFECT

Examples:

I am (due) to have dinner with them this evening	:	Je dois dîner chez eux ce soir
He was to die the following week	:	Il devait mourir la semaine suivante
You ought to go and see him	:	Vous devriez aller le voir
I ought to have tried to persuade him	:	J'aurais dû essayer de le persuader
He had to do the washing up yesterday	:	Il a dû faire la vaisselle hier (completed event)
We always had to leave our shoes outside the door	:	Nous devions toujours laisser nos chaussures devant la porte (habitual event)
I should have eaten it	:	J'aurais dû le manger
I ought to have eaten it	:	J'aurais dû le manger

Note the following refinement

If you are translating "ought to have been . . .ing" or "should have been . . .ing" you must use the conditional perfect of devoir followed by en train de* + INFINITIVE

He ought to have been reading	:	Il aurait dû être en train de lire
They should have been thinking about it	:	Ils auraient dû être en train d'y penser

C. To denote STRONG PROBABILITY

When translating from English into French (in proses) the above table of meanings will always apply if devoir is being used to express obligation. However, a problem arises over the translation of sentences such as these where devoir is being used to express strong probability:

I haven't got my key. I think I must have dropped it
I didn't have my key. I thought I must have dropped it
He must have been about nineteen
The village must have been about fifteen kilometres away

In the first two examples you will see that "I must have dropped it" appears in both even though the first example is set in the present and the second in the past. The best way to approach these sentences is to imagine them without any notion of probability, discover the tense of the positive statement and apply this tense to devoir. Remember that devoir is always followed by an ordinary present infinitive.

Study the following examples:

I haven't got my key. I think I must have dropped it.
(Imagine : "I haven't got my key. I think I have dropped it", which uses the perfect tense)
→ Je n'ai pas ma clef. J'ai dû la laisser tomber

I didn't have my key. I thought I must have dropped it
(Imagine : "I didn't have my key. I thought I had dropped it", which uses the pluperfect tense)
→ Je n'avais pas ma clef. J'avais dû la laisser tomber

He must have been about nineteen
(Imagine : "He was about nineteen", which must be imperfect)
→ Il devait avoir environ dix-neuf ans

The village must have been about fifteen kilometres away
(Imagine : "The village was about fifteen kilometres away", which must be imperfect
→ Le village devait être à environ quinze kilomètres

86. Some verbs in French require the insertion of à before a noun

to give something up	renoncer à qch	to obey someone/something	obéir à qn/qch
to look like s.o/s.thing	ressembler à qn/qch	to disobey someone/something	désobéir à
to please someone	plaire à qn	to forgive someone	pardonner à qn
to expect something	s'attendre à qch	to resist someone/something	résister à
(nb to expect someone	attendre qn)	think of	penser à qn/qch
		think over	réfléchir à qch

- He was thinking about his work : Il pensait à son travail

- She looks like her mother : Elle ressemble à sa mère
- I wasn't expecting this result : Je ne m'attendais pas à ce résultat

When using pronouns with these verbs you must distinguish between PEOPLE and THINGS

i) referring to things : `it'/`them' = y [NB there is no past participle agreement after y]
- He gave it up : Il y a renoncé
- I expected/was expecting it : Je m'y attendais

ii) referring to people:
- with non-reflexive verbs except penser: me, te, lui, nous, vous, leur (placed BEFORE the verb)

The present pleased him : Le cadeau lui a plu
My sister looks like me : Ma soeur me ressemble

- with penser & all reflexive verbs: à moi, à toi, à lui, à elle, à nous, à vous, à eux, à elles

I was thinking about him : Je pensais à lui

When translating `WHICH' or `WHOM' with the verbs listed above distinguish between PEOPLE and THINGS

i) (referring to people) WHOM : à qui

The people she was thinking about : Les gens à qui elle pensait
M.Lebrun is the one I want to please : M. Lebrun est celui à qui je veux plaire

ii) (referring to things) WHICH : auquel/à laquelle (sing) ; auxquels/auxquelles (pl) [takes the number and gender of the noun to which it is referring]

They're not the results I was expecting: Ce ne sont pas les résultats auxquels je m'attendais
The temptation I had to resist : La tentation à laquelle j'ai dû résister

87. TO THINK OF / TO THINK ABOUT

i) penser de if the meaning is to have an opinion of
What did you think of the film? : Qu'est-ce que vous avez pensé du film?
What did you think of it? : Qu'est-ce que vous en avez pensé?

i) penser à if the meaning is to reflect on
He was thinking of the accident : Il pensait à l'accident
He was thinking of it : Il y pensait
